

How can the FCC allow a company that is regulated by government to influence government as Sinclair Broadcasting's is doing? If this is not the closest thing to graft I've seen in quite awhile, it at least matches the overall pattern that is giving fewer and fewer of our citizen any confidence in our government. The old saw about: can't fix it 'til after it happens is ridiculous, but typical. The FCC can't fix it because it has happened in the past and now the FCC is as political as the politicians, continuing to side with those in power. You cannot regulate anything if you only respond after the damage is done. That's not regulation, it's a grievance system.

It's all so old, so for once, fix it!
